MORTEHOE HOLIDAY COTTAGE WINS PRESTIGIOUS AWARD

A farmhouse mentioned in the Domesday book in Morteheo has just been announced as the South West Regional property of 2010.

Yarde Farm, situated just outside Morteheo, was completely renovated in 2008 and now offers modern quality holiday accommodation coupled with original character and detail in a picturesque setting.

The local property beat over 1,100 holiday properties across the region to be recognised by MyCottageHoliday, the independent holiday cottage review website, as 'South West Cottage of The Year' in the 2010 Excellence Awards.

The awards seek to recognise excellence in the provision of self-catering holiday accommodation in the UK.

Kate Stone of Yarde Farm said: "We are really proud to win this award and the fact that it is based on guests reviews makes it even more special.

"The South West region is without doubt the most competitive region in the country, so we are delighted to be recognised in this way.

"The award could not have come at a better time as our second property, The Long Linhay, a one bedroom cottage has just been completed and is now ready for letting Andy Brown, editor of MyCottageHoliday, explained what it takes to win an award. "The finalists for each region and category were selected by the editorial judging panel based purely on the reviews left by guests on the website. The very best cottage holidays all offer something extra.

"Sometimes it's just little touches that make the difference for a holidaymaker. Consistency, commitment and attention to detail is what makes the winners stand out."
